Waterloo Region Nonviolence is dedicated to raising awareness about nonviolence as a way of being.

Violence is often thought to only describe damage done to a person's physical body. However, in reality the concept of violence is much more broad, and occurs whenever a person is treated like an object instead of a human being. It can be experienced physically, mentally, and emotionally.

Likewise, nonviolence is more than just a way of protesting. Nonviolence describes a quality of relationship whereby each participant's liberty is affirmed, and is a way of being in the world that recognizes the humanity in oneself and in others.

By signing this form and participating in the Day in the Park, you are stating that your group is committed to the principles of nonviolence.
